THE appeal made to the residents of Hongkong on behalf of the sufferers by the floods in the neighbouring province is one mittee remark in their letter to the forthickly populated with poor but happy peamants was the country bordering the North and West Rivers, dwelling in villages and communes. These are now for the most · part submerged, in many cases leaving an that Upper Barman Government to introduce undated and surrounded by, perhaps, miles of deep water. The poor despairing and suffering Germany, will shortly send a representative to heen taken up not only by the Tung Wa Hospital Committee, but also by the Roy. "J. B. Ost, of sthe Church Missionary Society, who has organised a "Kwangtung Inundation Fund," the application of which be, with other missionaries, will personally supervise in the distressed districts. The water, according to the litest advices, had to a great extent subsided, and the washed out population were beginning to return to their former homes, only to find them utterly desolate, the crops de-'s stroyed, and relatives and friends drowned or missing. The prospect before the sufferers is dreary indeed, and cannot fail to excite general commiseration and sympathy. It is one of those cases, also where promptness in giving is of even greator importance than the extent of the don thou

The rivers of China are her glory, but they too often prove also her sorrow. The Yellow River is known by the name of "China's Sorrow," and although none of the other streams bring the same misery and distress to the country as that great waterway, floods are frequent occurrences throughout the Empire. But the disaster which has now fallen on the district between Canton and Sum-shui is of more than ordinary, magnitude. Nothing like it has been known in stating that the house was a wealthy one, the Kwangtung since 1833, when the river harst its banks at the same place, namely, Shek-kok, near Sun-shui. Archletean . GRAY mentions it in his book on China, in the passage referring to canals, rivers, and emissionents, in which he save -"The rivers and canals are guarded, many points, by high banks with the view of preventing inundations. These embrukments, some of which are constructed of earth, others of stone, are standing mounments of the energy and enterprise of the Chinese of past ages. On various in the second case of the Canton river I have seen many vasi works of this nature. The most important are at Low-ko-koong, Kok-ki, and Chuk-keetow. A few lines further down the venerable Archdeacon refers to such an inundation having netually taken place, so that it was hardly necessary to - speak of the possibility as a mere matter of Conjecture; but Archdeacon Gnay is always charmingly desultory and inconsequent. The. reference is as follows :- "These embankments occasionally give war, and when they do so the results are most calcuritous. The Chinese are fully aware of the imwill be able to bear out. Archdeacon GRAY's statement as to their being standing monuit would seem that from some reason the into a weak state-either in consequence of above deposited all their rubbish in the basement or from some other cause. It must be borne in mind, however, that it was to no ordinary flood the banks gave way, and that the pasmy down the river was to some extent obstructed lower down by the barriers placed for the purpose of preventing the passage of French war ships. He makes no allusion to them in the pathetic description of the young queen's departure from her "sweet France," on the fateful 24th of August, a date which subsequent events were destined to muck-with a fearful stain of blood, in the family to which she was allied. Yet, doubtless they, too, were gazing with tenrful even at the receding shore, blessing the calm which retarded their course, trambling with vague fears as their voyage began amidst the cries of drowning men, and half-wishing that the English ships of the jealous Elizabeth might prevent them from reaching their dreary destination.
